Bradley, Sarah

(1956 -)

Born 1 January, 1956, Sheffield Yorkshire England

Occupation Judge, Lawyer, Magistrate, Solicitor

Summary

Her Honour Sarah Bradley was a judge of the District Court of Queensland, Australia since 25 March 1999. She was also a judge of the Children's Court of Queensland. Described as 'an inspiration to law students and young professionals', she is known to be unstintingly generous with her time.

Her Honour's approach to incarceration has been publicly scrutinised and criticised as she seeks alternatives to jail terms, believing that 'imprisonment as the ultimate deterrent is a myth'.

Her Honour was the first Magistrate in Queensland to be appointed as a Judge of the District Court of Queensland.

Her Honour retired from the courts on 30 June 2016. On 1 July 2016 she took up an appointment as an adjunct professor at Griffith Criminology Institute.

She was honored with an Order of Australia (AO) on Australia Day in 2020 for distinguished service to the law, and to the judiciary, to women in the legal profession, and to the community.

Details

Born in England, Sarah Bradley and her family migrated to Australia in 1968. Disembarking in Sydney, the family took a train to Queensland where they settled on the Sunshine Coast. She started secondary school at Nambour High School, and by the age of fifteen had decided she wanted to be a lawyer. Her parents sent her to a boarding school (Glennie Memorial School) in Toowoomba for her senior year. She finished school and began an Arts Law degree at the University of Queensland. She graduated with a BA (1976) and an LLB (1978). She found little to be inspired by, except from teachers like Margaret White (now a judge of the Supreme Court) and Quentin Bryce, now retired as Governor General.
