(1989 -)

Born 19890101, Australia

Occupation Social action organisation

Summary

The National Foundation for Australian Women was established in 1989 by the bequest of Canberra feminist, Pamela Denoon. NFAW objectives are: to advance and protect all interests of Australian women in all spheres; to ensure that the aims and ideals of the women's movement and its collective wisdom are handed on to new generations of Australian women. The foundation seeks to strengthen and support women's groups by: sponsoring research and advocacy; working to increase support for feminist goals in the community, and improving communication among women's groups. NFAW founded the Australian Women's Archive Project in 1999.

Details

The National Foundation for Australian Women promotes the rights and interests of Australian women. It is non-party political and independent of government funding. The NFAW relies on the voluntary work of its members, including its Board. NFAW has individual and organisation membership. Individual members are entitled to attend all Board meetings, put forward issues for consideration and vote or stand for the Board. Organisations are welcome to join and will receive all entitlements except voting rights. NFAW produce Broadside newsletter quarterly. Marie Coleman was the founding Secretary. NFAW held the first National Women's Conference in Canberra 1990.
